Note

The information board at the car park entrance details where you are in relation to Cotehele House and the wider estate. The route flirts with the waymarked St Dominica Heritage Trail – make sure to follow the directions below.

A short walk when it comes to mileage, but one that's packed with evidence of the Tamar Valley's rich industrial and horticultural heritage. Riverside limekilns were used to produce lime (by slowly burning limestone with locally sourced wood) to 'sweeten' the acid valley soils.

Huge crops of strawberries were grown on the once-wooded slopes, initially fertilised with street sweepings, night soil, offal and fish waste: the delightfully named 'Devonport Dock Dung'! The walk ascends through old market gardens to Bohetherick, a once-bustling hamlet on the Edgcumbes' Cotehele estate (in the hands of the National Trust since 1947), before returning to the quay via Cotehele Mill.

The Route

1 SX 424681 From the car park entrance follow signs ahead for the Discovery Centre and Cotehele Mill. Note the huge limekilns, and the Shamrock, an old ketch-rigged Tamar sailing barge, in one of the riverside wharves. She was built in Plymouth in 1899 and carried cargo up and down the river. Head towards the water to round the building housing the Discovery Centre. On reaching the lane turn left, passing the Etherick Lake reedbeds; follow the lane over Cotehele Bridge (built in 1820) to reach a T-junction.

2 SX 422678 About 75 yards after the limekilns turn sharp right on a steeply ascending track (Doneys Lane), passing round a wooden barrier. Head steadily uphill through Bohetherick Wood.

3 SX 420678 At the first wooden waymark post turn sharp left, uphill, on a broad grassy permissive path which passes above old market gardens (all signs of cultivation have long since disappeared). Pass through a gate and out into the open on East Down, planted with plum trees in the 1900s, and later with daffodils: the view down the Tamar is one of the finest in the valley.

Follow the fenced path along the top edge of the field, and then a track, to reach a road.

4 SX 420674 Turn right, uphill, through the hamlet of Bohetherick. During the 19th century the settlement was at the heart of the valley's horticultural industry, which at its peak employed 15,000 people; the houses here were provided for workers on the Cotehele estate. Ignore a lane left – note the 'VR' postbox in the wall – then bear right at the next lane junction, signed to St Dominick.

5 SX 417675 A few paces on, where the lane bears sharp left, turn right along a track (Dymas Town Lane), signed to the parking area for Tremletts Cottages. Pass behind the cottages and continue along a track, under trees. The track bears sharp left, then right, and continues to zigzag down the hillside between hedgebanks, narrowing and becoming rougher in its lower reaches.

7 SX 416680 Cross a stream to find a waymark post (the path ahead starts to ascend gently); here turn right (unsigned), down an embanked path. This is 'Mill

Turning' – the old road to Cotehele Mill.
